SCENES FROM THE GOTLAND CONFERENCE 20-25 AUGUST 2007
PHOTOGRAPHS BY PAUL HORLEY

Dave Addison flew in from Samoa for the conference, and here makes a point during his presentation.

"Silver Moai" awards were given out at the Medieval Banquet. Among the recipients were Grant McCall, Atholl Anderson, and Georgia Lee (the little moai were decorated with silver foil).

Cameras click at an excursion to visit several of Gotland's numerous Viking sites. These huge and ancient stones form an impressive outline of a Viking ship.

Charlie Love and Frank Morin discuss the moai roads.

Juan Grau, of Chile, who never misses a meeting, talks things over at lunch with Joan Wozniak.

Dr. Leif. Borgert, Rector of Gotland University, welcomed conference attendees at the opening session.

Steve Fischer and Nicholas Cauwe sample the jungle-juice, er, oops, mead, at the great Viking village outing.

France's Catherine Orliac clarifies a point in Paul Wallin's session.

The irrepressible Grant McCall peddling around Visby's picturesque streets. What would the meetings be like without him? (not so much fun).

Keynote speaker, John Flenley, is all smiles at the party at the Viking village.

EIF's president, Dave Rose, thanked the Wallins, the University, and all, for a splendid meeting and great blow-out Medieval Banquet which featured, among other things, fire-twirling dancers.

Patrick Chapman, Maria Eugenia Santa Coloma, and José Miguel Ramirez, all engrossed in the latest technology.

Paul Wallin and Helene Martinsson-Wallin greet conference attendees at the wonderful opening party, held at Gotland's Fornsal Historical Museum. Aside from greeting old friends and meeting new ones, attendees were able to visit the museum's treasures, including amazing heaps of Viking hoard.
